First, and most important, I am happy to mention, is, the laying of mains and pipes throughout the buildings for the purpose of lighting with gas. The old system of oil lamps used heretofore, was not only a very troublesome and dangerous means of lighting the Institution, but also less conducive to cleanliness. A far better and much less expensive light will thus be obtained. Complaints being constantly made of the scarcity of water in the pavilions, a good and sufficient supply has now been provided for that portion of the Institution. Formerly a one inch main pipe was...
