CHAPTER IV HOME SERVICE Return to England after six years absence--Chatham 1861--International Exhibition 1862--Aldershot 1863--Canada and the States 1864--Adjutant and Brigade-Major B. E. --Prince Arthur--Plymouth 1869--The Pontoon troop. Before leaving Kong Kong I had rejoined my old company (the 23rd), the three officers ordered to go home with it being Graham (a Brevet Lieut. -Colonel), Pritchard and myself (subalterns). The ship we voyaged in was the Adelaide, a four-master, with auxiliary steam power. Her steam power was certainly very auxiliary; moreover her owners were paid by the day, and it took her a long time to convey us to the shores of England. It was not until May 22, or four months after our start, that we steamed into Portsmouth harbour. Our voyage, though hideously slow, as it seemed to us, who were eager to get home, was not an uneventful one. We put into Singapore and Anjer, were driven by the edge of a hurricane to the Mauritius, stopped for some time at Simons Bay and Cape Town, and had to put in for coal at St. Vincent and Vigo Bay on the coast of Spain. There were officers of all branches of the Service on board, but only eight subalterns for the duties of orderly officer and watch on deck. What are called combatant officers perform those duties. The others lounged about and did nothing, but at the same time were very tenacious of their relative rank, when it came to a...
